DEATH
On the 11th December, at THE FENCE, 115, Beresford-road, Camberwell, S.E., WILLIAM HARDING, late of Hongkong, aged 72.

The Daily Press.

HONGKONG, JANUARY 15TH, 1894.

The fact that the Coinage Committee of the United States House of Representatives has reported in favour of the Bland Bill reminds us that the silver question is far from being dead, though it is probable that for some time to come there will be nothing more definite in respect to it than desultory skirmishing along the line between the respective parties. Mr. Bland introduced his Bill on the 5th December. It is a free-coining Bill repealing that portion of the Bill of 1873 preventing the coining of silver dollars and re-enacting the Coinage Act of 1873. Commenting upon it at the time of its introduction the San Francisco Chronicle suggested that there was little if any prospect that the measure would pass, at least for the present, notwithstanding the fact that a majority of each House are in favour of free coinage; or if passed now, that the Bill could receive the approval of the President. Mr. Cleveland's message clearly indicates that he is opposed to any coining legislation at this time; and whatever changes may hereafter occur it is still apparent that he dominates his party to such an extent as to enable him to prevent the passage of a Bill which he would be certain to veto. Our contemporary went on to point out certain changes that might occur which would lessen Mr. Cleveland's influence and enable a free coining Bill to be passed against his objections. "But," it continues, "the present interest in the campaign which Mr. Bland has so promptly opened lies in inquiry as to whether the Representatives and Senators who assented when they gave their assent to the repeal bill that they were in favour of independent legislation in favour of silver will now be ready to release their promise. It will be remembered, for instance, that Senator Voorhees proclaimed on all occasions that he was in favour of silver coinage. Indeed, he has never recanted his entire sworn devotion to free coinage. And so in the House. The records will show that a clear majority of the members have pledged themselves to vote for some measure for recognition of silver in the Mint. And in considering the outlook for silver legislation it should be borne in mind that a Congressional election will be near at hand before Congress adjourns. There is little doubt that the constituencies of a clear majority of Representatives would vote for silver coinage. Members desiring to be re-elected will not fail to take this into "account." The Chronicle is a Republican organ and therefore opposed to Mr. Cleveland, and in discussing this silver question it introduces that of tariff reform, advocating protectionist views, but, so far as its remarks are confined to silver they are fair and reasonable. It is not certain, however, that even Mr. Cleveland himself is opposed to silver. On the contrary, there is reason to believe that he would be glad to promote any arrangement that would restore international bimetallism. In his recent message to Congress, referring to the repeal of the Sherman Law, he said that of course after the recent financial perturbation there was necessary, for the re-establishment of business confidence; when, however, through this restored confidence the money which had been frightened into hoarding places was returned to trade and enterprise, a survey of the situation would probably disclose a safe path leading to a permanently sound currency abundantly sufficient to meet every requirement of the increasing population and business. In the pursuit of this object, he continued, they should resolutely turn away from alluring and temporary expedients, determined to be content with nothing less than a lasting and comprehensive financial plan. In these circumstances he was convinced that a reasonable delay in dealing with this subject, instead of being injurious, would increase the probability of wise action, and he suggested that it would be wise to give general authority to the President to invite other nations to a conference at any time when there should be a fair prospect of accomplishing an international agreement on the subject of coinage. The longer the time that elapses before action is taken, however, the more difficult will it be to revert to former conditions. Trade and finance are gradually adapting themselves to the world over to the single standard, and in a few years it may come to pass that even those who were the most ardent in their advocacy for the maintenance of bimetallism will have to recognize that the restoration of that system, involving, as it might, another monetary convulsion, would be no less a calamity than was its original abolition. In the meantime, the prospects of an early recovery in the gold price of silver are not very bright. At the time of the repeal of the Sherman Act it was reported that many of the silver mines were closing, but we do not find any indication in the American papers that they have remained closed, and Professor Moreton Brewster, in a letter which we reproduced on Saturday, speaks of the wages and prices adjustment in Colorado as for the time being complete, from which the inference may be drawn that even at the present low price of the metal silver mining can be carried on profitably.

account." The Evening Gazette says:—

"The report of the committee of inquiry to the effect of the history of the concern to be of any special value to its unfortunate shareholders. It will, however, be of great interest to the public to attempt to fix the date when between silver and gold was a much more difficult question to answer. The point which caused the most difficulty was the political aspect of the coinage, and the fact that the two sides perforce had to be agreed upon."

The immediate consequence, however, upon exports from India and more particularly upon exports from India to China, in which the company was interested, had been most unfortunate.—"most disastrous for the moment. They were assured that trade would resume its normal condition and that the present disturbance in the road was inconsiderable during for a time, owing to the shower of sparks and burning material which lodged upon the road, but fortunately the air's own self-interest was in their favor. The Bland act soon all danger was past, and the long by that time being a comparative rain. Much sympathy is felt for the men who had recently moved into the houses. The property and furniture were insured.

At the meeting of the P. & O. Company had on the 12th December, the Chairman, Sir Thomas Sutherland, in the course of his speech, referred to the discussion which had taken place between the Government of India and the Government of the Queen of England on the subject of the coinage of silver, but whether it was wise for that Government to attempt to fix the date when between silver and gold was a much more difficult question to answer. Company had on the 12th December, the Chairman, Sir Thomas Sutherland, in the course of his speech, referred to the discussion which had taken place between the Government of India and the Government of the Queen of England on the subject of the coinage of silver, but whether it was wise for that Government to attempt to fix the date when between silver and gold was a much more difficult question to answer. The point which caused the most difficulty was the political aspect of the coinage, and the fact that the two sides perforce had to be agreed upon."

The immediate consequence, however, upon exports from India and more particularly upon exports from India to China, in which the company was interested, had been most unfortunate.—"most disastrous for the moment. They were assured that trade would resume its normal condition and that the present disturbance in the road was inconsiderable during for a time, owing to the shower of sparks and burning material which lodged upon the road, but fortunately the air's own self-interest was in their favor. The Bland act soon all danger was past, and the long by that time being a comparative rain. Much sympathy is felt for the men who had recently moved into the houses. The property and furniture were insured.
